Federal Reserve Announces Delay in the Issue Date of Redesigned $100 Note

West Caldwell, N.J. (October 1, 2010) On October 1, the Federal Reserve Board announced a delay in the issue date of the redesigned $100 note. This new design incorporates cutting edge, anti-counterfeiting technologies and the Federal Reserve imposes strict quality controls to ensure that users of U.S. currency around the world receive the highest quality notes.

The U.S. Bureau of Engraving and Printing manufactures Federal Reserve notes and has identified a problem with sporadic creasing of the paper during printing of the new $100 note, which was not apparent during extensive pre-production testing. As a consequence, the Federal Reserve will not have sufficient inventories to begin distributing the new $100 notes as planned.

The U.S. Bureau of Engraving and Printing is working to resolve this problem, and the Federal Reserve Board will announce a new issue date for the redesigned $100 note as soon as possible. The originally scheduled issue date was February 10, 2011.

Glory (U.S.A.) Inc. is committed to our previously announced schedule and will proceed with equipment upgrades as originally planned. We will continue to monitor the status of the redesigned $100 note as the U.S. Bureau of Engraving and Printing works to resolve the printing problem.
